

Boost Run (“BRUN”) Begins Trading on Nasdaq with $940 Million of Contracted Customer Revenue

May 11, 2026

NORTHBROOK, Ill., May 11, 2026 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Boost Run, Inc. (Nasdaq: BRUN), an NVIDIA Preferred Cloud Partner operating in adherence with NVIDIA Reference Architecture standards, today provided an operational and financial update reflecting continued commercial momentum, expanding deployment capacity and disciplined execution.

“Contracted demand and deployment continue moving in lockstep,” said Andrew Karos, Founder and CEO of Boost Run. “With the majority of our contracted revenue already in production and the remainder tied to scheduled deployments through fiscal 2026, we have clear visibility into recurring revenue as capacity comes online.”

Operational and Financial Highlights

Contracted Revenue

Boost Run enters its Nasdaq listing with $940M in long-term contracted revenue across its customer portfolio, with average contract terms of approximately three years. Of this contracted revenue, the majority is currently in production, with the remainder scheduled for execution in FY2026.

Free Cash Flow

Boost Run enters its Nasdaq listing with a continued track record of free cash flow generation and expects to maintain FCF positive operations through its ongoing deployments and expansion.

FY2026 Revenue Outlook

Boost Run expects to exit FY2026 with at least $375M in annualized recurring revenue based on current contracts, reflecting the Company's continued growth and diversification across both customers and sectors.

Infrastructure Expansion

Boost Run operates six U.S. data center locations today, with five additional locations in progress, expanding the Company's total accessible infrastructure capacity to over 125MW.
